Gladys Walton as "Second Hand Rose"

LITTLE ROSIE QUINN'S playmate wasn't so Irish as herself. His name was Nat Rosenstein. But they played together like a brother and sister and when Rosie's mother died it was "Old Man" Rosenstein, owner of a second hand shop, who adopted Rosie and gave her the privilege of working in his shop just like his own daughter. Rosie led a hard life. Everything was second hand for her, even pleasures. When Rosenstein got sick and hard up and Nat was in trouble over stolen goods it was Rosie who was told to marry Tim McCarthy, a middle-aged Irishman, fairly well off because he had money enough to save the store from creditors. Rosie said "Yes" bravely, but when she thought of her sweetheart she cried and when McCarthy told her he was a "second hand husband" that was worse. But Cupid has a way even in a second hand store.
